Seven Years Ago Today, Terri Schiavo Lived Her Last Day
Seven Years Ago Today, Terri Schiavo Lived Her Last Day

On March 30, 2005, Terri Schiavo had her last full day of life on this earth and both her family and Father Frank Pavone of Priests for Life are remembering the last moments they shared with the woman whose former husband won a court order to take her life.

If I ever become like Terri, I know for myself I never want a feeding tube inserted, I do not want to be on a ventilator. I want to go home and be with my Heavenly Father.

[\[link to abundanthope.net\]](http://abundanthope.net) for those who felt concern for Terri, I worked with her, in her last days and after it was over.

You are saved by your own desire to have eternal life and grow in the ways of God and not any other way. God gives you a lot of time to acquire wisdom before you make your final decision and fuse/merge with the Father Fragment within your mind/soul. Jesus taught the reincarnation of the soul to grow in wisdom and grace. It was left out of your bible on purpose. Where is your WISDOM? Your GRACE? Your respect for LIFE? Not much present yet anyway on this world. Where is your love of LIFE? Missing, if its OK to have the genocide going on in the Middle East.

Being written in the Book of LIFE means making the final decision to Serve the Will of the Father and Become LIKE him. The process of Fusion/merger with the Father Fragment makes you an actual Son of the Father, where by before then, over the ages of wisdom attainment you were a FAITH SON. The harvest of REAL SONS from this world is rather small, and most will be moving on to try again elsewhere. You are not ready to graduate to the higher ways. This graduation is EARNED.

A decision like that is a tough one, but living as a vegetable only soothes those that are not laying in the bed.

Terri is better off now.

After having to make the same sort of decision on my own sis who suffered an aneurysm, it is a really hard thing to do, but one has to put there own feelings aside and do what the comatose person would want, not what the family would want.

Well I could be wrong but I imagine not many people would want to live like that.

My mother suffered a massive stroke and it became a very touchy situation for a while as she did not want to be kept artificially alive.

That was over 3 years ago now and although her mobility is quite hindered and her vocabulary is extremely limited, you can tell when you talk to her that it is still her in there. She still has a great sense of humor too.

there was a situation played out in my family too when my cousin went into terminal lupus. he had fortunately left clearly written instructions and it took some effort to get them listened too, as there was a doctor who wanted to save him and thought maybe it wasn't too late. I was a nurse, and most of the time folks are not still hanging around when they become like this. And that is obvious in fact whether there is anybody at "home". In time we will have valid ways of determining is the soul is still there and allowing the body to go if not.

When the soul hangs in there, it has chosen to hang in there and sometimes comes their greatest gifts to those who care for them.

Yeah, that's the impression I get when I think about her and all she's been through...about the 'hanging in there' part. She had already been through 3 bouts of cancer before the stroke. As a matter of fact it was the chemo that had caused the advanced deterioration of both her carotid arteries. But because the deterioration was over a given amount of time, the body was able to adjust bloodflow to the brain through some of the lesser arteries. It's how she survived and I was blown away when the doctors told us that.

I remember coming home one night as a teenager and she was quite drunk. She told me something very special about how she felt when I was born. I think of things like and all the spiritual lessons she taught me and all of this 'awakening' stuff that has occurred to me, and how she's still alive during this time period. It just makes me wonder...

I felt from very early on that Michael had caused her coma and was doing everything he could to have her dead. The lowlife bastard finally managed to kill her.

Any decent man would have given her family custody so that they could take care of her. He was scared she would somehow come out of her coma and tell what really happened to her.

I hope he rots in hell.

you can call bs all you want, the events were real between us. I am minding terri's business here in fact. I did try to write her parents but never heard back from them, so the letter went undelivered. I am skilled at what I do and I know I was in contact with her. Esu was initially part of it too and at that first part, I wasn't taking notes, so that is not written down. My notes were just notes too, made as we talked and not totally inclusive thus of the whole conversations.

Terris husband tried to murder her, that is why she was in that condition in the first place.

And I think the court process knew he was guilty. I don't remember the law right now there, but it was properly argued at one point that the parent's rights were primary in the situation for some reason though in the whole mess on TV. There were a lot of people who felt he was the one that harmed her and should have been listened to in that strange case,, regardless of rights or laws. the man abandoned her in the first place, the way he got paid off and what he paid for was reason for scepticism. I don't remember all the drama now.

He did not abandon her. He paid for her nursing home care and never divorced her. Supposedly she was an anorexic and had a stroke. She is dead. Stop trying to put the spotlight on yourself by saying you are communicating with her. She is dead and gone.

More than twenty times the Schiavo case was heard in Florida courts. On all occasions the court ruled that the Terri's fate was under her husband's control, respecting the sanctity of marriage. Schiavo's parents, Bob and Mary Schindler, refused to accept this verdict, feeling that their daughter would somehow recover. Of this struggle, Schiavo's attorney George Felos told the US District Court, "The real grievance is not they [the Schindlers] did not have a day in court, that they did not have due process. The real grievance is they disagree with the result." [2]

In 2003, a court-appointed guardian for Schiavo wrote that during the protracted legal struggle, her parents had "voiced the disturbing belief that they would keep Theresa alive at any and all costs", even if that required amputation of her limbs. "As part of the hypothetical presented", the guardian's report stated, "Schindler family members stated that even if Theresa had told them of her intention to have artificial nutrition withdrawn, they would not do it."

In a final postscript to Schiavo's short life, the autopsy conducted after her death established that her brain weighed half that of a healthy human brain -- severe damage that left her blind and incapable of thought or emotion. Said the medical examiner: "This damage was irreversible. No amount of therapy or treatment would have regenerated the massive loss of neurons." [4] and there were those who also thought THOSE images were corrupted in support of the large show/story for weeks on TV to justify it. I think some found the head did not match or something like that. Being starved 3 times did not help. Also, I believe a nurse reported finding her trying to suffocate her in the hospital and was fired. As I said above, one day man will be able to know if a soul has left or not. If it has not left, the body must be cared for. Otherwise its murder.

her soul had not left, all those long years she sought for the truth to come out.

Terri: My poor Mother, she loves me so. I may leave just to stop her pain. This body has been starved 3 times, and it sets me back. My husband tried to suffocate me.

Candace: Your husband tried to suffocate you?!!!

Terri: Yes, and I fought and fought. He is bigger and he was angry. I passed out I guess. I went into a coma, my brain damaged.

Candace: Why did he do this to you?

Terri: I think he had a girl friend. He later felt very guilty. I didn't do well with him because I knew, and I never trusted him.

Every time I am starved, I lose some more of my function. Michael starved me and gave me shots in the early years after my accident. He also tried to block my breathing several times.

The nurses were wonderful. Why didn't they help me?

Candace: At this time, I told her about a nurse's story on www.rense.com, from 1996, that some had been fired for attempting to help her with Michael.

In November, Michael Schiavo took her to the University of California, San Francisco for experimental nerve stimulation – the Thalamic stimulator. The treatment took several months but was unsuccessful. He returned to Florida with her in January 1991 and admitted her as an inpatient to the Mediplex Rehabilitation Center in Bradenton, Florida. While there, he later said that he often took "her to parks and public places in hopes of sparking some recovery". On July 19, 1991, Terri Schiavo was transferred to the Sabal Palms Skilled Care Facility, where she received neurological testing and regular speech and occupational therapy until 1994.[13][14] In mid 1993, Michael Schiavo requested a do not resuscitate order for her after she contracted a urinary tract infection. The court appointed guardian ad litem, Jay Wolfson,[15] later wrote a report stating that Michael Schiavo's decision was "predicated on his reasoned belief that there was no longer any hope for Terri's recovery.

[\[link to www.rense.com\]](http://www.rense.com) affidavit from a nurse who cared for her EARLY on.

here is part 9. 9. Throughout my time at Palm Gardens, Michael Schiavo was focused on Terri's death. Michael would say "When is she going to die?," "Has she died yet?" and "When is that bitch gonna die?" These statements were common knowledge at Palm Gardens, as he would make them casually in passing, without regard even for who he was talking to, as long as it was a staff member. Other statements which I recall him making include "Can't you do anything to accelerate her death - won't she ever die?" When she wouldn't die, Michael would be furious. Michael was also adamant that the family should not be given information. He made numerous statements such as "Make sure the parents aren't contacted." I recorded Michael's statements word for word in Terri's chart, but these entries were also deleted after the end of my shift. Standing orders were that the family wasn't to be contacted, in fact, there was a large sign in the front of her chart that said under no circumstances was her family to be called, call Michael immediately, but I would call them, anyway, because I thought they should know about their daughter.

That family went thru hell because of him.

part 10 10. Any time Terri would be sick, like with a UTI or fluid buildup in her lungs, colds, pneumonia, Michael would be visibly excited, thrilled even, hoping that she would die. He would call me, as I was the nurse supervisor on the floor, and ask for every little detail about her temperature, blood pressure, etc., and would call back frequently asking if she was dead yet. He would blurt out "I'm going to be rich!," and would talk about all the things he would buy when Terri died, which included a new car, a new boat, and going to Europe, among other things.

11. When Michael visited Terri, he always came alone and always had the door closed and locked while he was with Terri. He would typically be there about twenty minutes or so. When he left Terri would be trembling, crying hysterically, and would be very pale and have cold sweats. It looked to me like Terri was having a hypoglycemic reaction, so I'd check her blood sugar. The glucometer reading would be so low it was below the range where it would register an actual number reading. I would put dextrose in Terri's mouth to counteract it. This happened about five times on my shift as I recall. Normally Terri's blood sugar levels were very stable due to the uniformity of her diet through tube feeding. It is my belief that Michael injected Terri with Regular insulin, which is very fast acting.

Please for some truth of this matter read my work with her. That man was evil and was covering up so he did not get caught. It was obvious to many of us who watched that charade, and to me, but even I did not suspect until she told me, that he was the cause in the first place of her disability. that explained everything. I don't recall right now, why or how he got the insurance money reward, I would need to look up the wiki version I suppose.

Quoting: Nobody in Particular

For someone that was in and amongst it you don't remember a lot. How was he the cause??

Quoting: Anonymous Coward 13532370

Its in my story with her. Go read it. ok don't read it, here it is.

Terri: My poor Mother, she loves me so. I may leave just to stop her pain. This body has been starved 3 times, and it sets me back. My husband tried to suffocate me.

Candace: Your husband tried to suffocate you?!!!

Terri: Yes, and I fought and fought. He is bigger and he was angry. I passed out I guess. I went into a coma, my brain damaged.

Candace: Why did he do this to you?

Terri: I think he had a girl friend. He later felt very guilty. I didn't do well with him because I knew, and I never trusted him.

Every time I am starved, I lose some more of my function. Michael starved me and gave me shots in the early years after my accident. He also tried to block my breathing several times.

The nurses were wonderful. Why didn't they help me?

Candace: At this time, I told her about a nurse's story on www.rense.com, from 1996, that some had been fired for attempting to help her with Michael.

Quoting: Nobody in Particular

How are you communicating with her here?? and she says...I think he had a girlfriend??? She doesn't know??? If she is floating around communicating with you, you would think she would know...

Quoting: Anonymous Coward 13532370

the statement refers to the time before HER "accident", that she thought he had a boyfriend.

A decision like that is a tough one, but living as a vegetable only soothes those that are not laying in the bed.

Terri is better off now.

After having to make the same sort of decision on my own sis who suffered an aneurysm, it is a really hard thing to do, but one has to put there own feelings aside and do what the comatose person would want, not what the family would want.

but you are not Terri and I say are NOT because she still exists even if her earth body is gone. I have seen amazing recovery when the soul does NOT vacate and wants to survive in the current form and gets the necessary support for doing so.

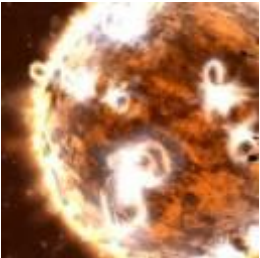

You cannot speak for what she wanted. Others knew and did who were her care givers. And we fired, or ignored or testimony disallowed. Terri is a brave soul who lived 15 years to accomplish what was RIGHT. She failed because of the powers on this world. Maybe one day, she will have her day in court in another way. And there are other courts who will be looking at that jackass husband and decide his fate.

Everyone of you supporting the murder of terry over 15 years should be reading all the links I posted above. You are here to learn and she did provide quite a learning experience for some who crossed her path. This case had a profound impact on me. The history of Terri and her husband, his constant known verbal abuse about her looks, the mysteriousness of her sudden death and Michael Schiavo's behavior towards her brother that morning - all pointed to murder or at least manslaughter. They were married SIX years and it was a troublesome marriage. A man should not have the right to kill a woman just because he has a marriage certificate. The people who had been with her the longest and knew her the best, her parents and siblings, were not allowed to keep her alive.

Kudos to President Bush for trying to stop this travesty, to Glenn Beck who did extensive coverage on his radio show with regular interviews with Terri's brother, and to Rev. Jesse Jackson, who was the only well known figure to go stand with the family IN PERSON.

Oh please people. GOD does not will this sort of stuff. STOP IT. STOP IT STOP IT. The woman was murdered by her husband and survived the murder, as to her body. The devil doesn't save people thru the doctors either, but you can be sure the "devil" ie, her husband and his lawyers and the guy professing help to teh terminally ill, were devils for their various reasons. People. you must stop the superstition placed in your churches. There is not one devil and no one God either. Terri was an advanced soul and her own god. She made a choice to incarnate here and she made a choice to not give up that incarnation even with the murder attempt.

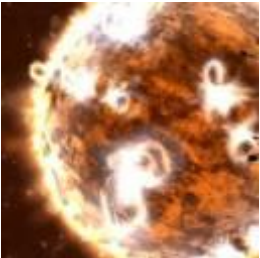

And I ill remind you, Jesus didn't die on the cross either and your bible tells you that in fact. He did not die for YOU. He was also MURDERED except he survived it too. That which is called God is the hierarchy of the Creation. Decisions are not made by these Gods with terri for example. Angels yes however, and because terri chose to continue her life, that was granted. If she chose to leave it, she would have left it at that time and everyone would have accepted it. SHE CHOSE what she did, she is a sovereign being. She wanted her parents to get what was due to them and for her murderous husband to get what was due to him and she wanted to see the earth changes and this world reborn. That was denied by her husband, and all the people involved in her story. Teh nursing home administration should have reported that rat husband early one when rehab was much more possible. And "god" meaning her angel support team would have provided a lot of support to her demonstrating the possibilities of LIVING.

I dont have a link because i saw this on a tv special a while back. But there is a man in a veg state and his wife gives him high doses of Ambien and he comes out of it for short periods of time while on it. I wonder if this ambien therapy would have done the same for her.

Which is exactly why Uncreation should not even be an option, we should not be forced to choose between living as wish to and being what we wish to and not existing at all.

do you have any idea of how universal ENERGY works and universal MIIND works. People must either submit to rehabilitation or face uncreation which prevents a lot of black HOLES. It is not just an issue of the soul, it is the issue of universal energy delivery. This world and solar system have been so dark, that the dark were taking it all into a black hole. And that also uncreates beings I might add. And these ones that face uncreation for their acts v often uncreated or seriously damaged other souls by technology, during their war games. Its all fair to me.

I followed Terri's case long before it became headline news and knew in depth what was happening on various sides of the controversy. I wrote to politicians to try to spare her life, since I felt it would be so wrong to kill her. The day she died was pretty much the day I gave up on the human race, and nothing that's happened since has caused me to change my mind. I haven't given up on spiritual change, though.

Quoting: Anonymous Coward 9476666

I was with ya' A/C.

Quoting: Keats

Until the day Terri died, I was sure a last-minute appeal would save her. Since there were indications that Terri had awareness and her family was willing to take care of her, allowing her husband to kill her seemed more like murder than caring.

I don't know if this has been brought up, since I haven't read all the posts, but I've read that withholding food and water is a terrible way to die and that criminals are treated with more caring than Terri was in the method of death. It would have been more honest and maybe more kind to Terri if they'd given her poison and just killed her outright.

Soon after Terri died a woman spoke up and said she'd been in a coma where people were trying to decide whether or not to withhold her food and water. She could hear everything being said but wasn't able to communicate by voice, and it was only because someone noticed that her hand movements seemed to have some meaning that she was allowed to live and eventually come out of her coma. I'm not saying Terri would have come out of her coma, but from all I'd read, I wasn't convinced that she was a vegetable and that all hope was gone.

initial papers did report heck trauma. The whole thing was fucked up from day one. And she knows how she got that way. the Potassium depletion was a made up cover story for a murder with the added story that she dieted too extremely, so why don't you ones try to figure out the why of that one if you are going to discuss this. WHY WAS THERE A COVERUP. Believe me, besides the neck injury, supported or not, that she had a period of suffocation would have been obvious to competent medical people. I suspect she was left too long and there was some sort of medical incompetency, thus the insurance settlement, but I never fully understood what was claimed to happen. Insurance companies would rather pay up settlements, its cheaper sometimes than a drawn out case. This whole thing smelled for the git go.

And the big media show also suggested years upon years of games. That she stuck thru it all, is what I find amazing. for 15 shit ass years that woman lived in a hell of other peoples making. And the lessons will come to some over that one.

Terri Schiavo's husband had a girlfriend for many years, and fathered 2 children by her. He had the girlfriend when Terri was injured. I really believe that Terri had caught him, and was going to divorce him. You can bet that Terri's husband wanted her dead. If she died quickly, he had the settlement money plus the life insurance. He wanted her dead, a divorce would have cost him the money.

Killing a person by thirst and starvation is absolutely a horrible way to go. The Nazi's used to do this during WW2. One of the most famous examples of the Nazi's doing this, was a story about Saint Maximillian Kolbe, who took the place of another prisoner who was condemned to death by thirst and starvation. 10 prisoners, including Saint Maximillian Kolbe, were thrown into a locked cell, with no food or water. 10 days after being locked up, and left to die by thirst and starvation, Father Kolbe and 2 other prisoners were found to be still alive. A shot of carbolic acid to the arm finished them off. This method of death by starvation and thirst was used by the Nazi's to deter escapes from the prison camps, and to keep the prisoners in line. In the case I mention, a prisoner had escaped, and 10 random prisoners were selected to die by thirst and starvation as punishment.

What does it say about the state of our country, when it is legal to make a person, whether they are old, handicapped, etc, die by thirst and starvation, but if you do this to an animal, it is against the law, and you will be convicted and imprisoned?

LIFE IS a GIFT and one day, as soon as you are 65 you will be considered expendable. Ponder that one. These things do happen on this world, it is a world to learn wisdom. if we had real medical care, and this was a loving world, people would not ask to check out by suicide, assisted or otherwise. That we have these issues here and which do need discussing, means this is not a very perfected world yet.

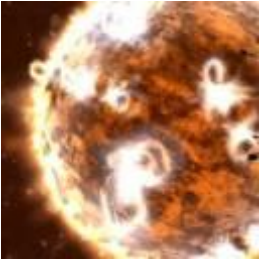

Genrally those that create suicide, assisted or otherwise, if they are staying with their life eternal will repeat the lesson until suicide becomes not an desire. There are people who might use suicide who are double agents and the like, if they know that their capture will mean a horrid death. hardly applies to this situation or other usual reasons for suicide. There are people who do not want eternal life and that is granted to them by the way. It is a choice. Terri was already a pretty old eternal being and well capable of the choice she made to LIVE

Response to the man saying that starving her to death was cruel. Assisted suicide is much less cruel, and a fuck lot quicker. With the laws as they are now, you can legally starve someone to death, but giving them an injection of pain medications that would painlessly allow them to sleep to death gets you executed in some states.

You are saved by your own desire to have eternal life and grow in the ways of God and not any other way. God gives you a lot of time to acquire wisdom before you make your final decision and fuse/merge with the Father Fragment within your mind/soul. Jesus taught the reincarnation of the soul to grow in wisdom and grace. It was left out of your bible on purpose. Where is your WISDOM? Your GRACE? Your respect for LIFE? Not much present yet anyway on this world. Where is your love of LIFE? Missing, if its OK to have the genocide going on in the Middle East.

Being written in the Book of LIFE means making the final decision to Serve the Will of the Father and Become LIKE him. The process of Fusion/merger with the Father Fragment makes you an actual Son of the Father, where by before then, over the ages of wisdom attainment you were a FAITH SON. The harvest of REAL SONS from this world is rather small, and most will be moving on to try again elsewhere. You are not ready to graduate to the higher ways. This graduation is EARNED.

Exactly, Amody. He had very little, if anything, to gain outside of the insurance money, most of which had been eaten up by her medical bills far before he'd even received it, by her death, except her dignity.

Quoting: redheadturkey

He deserved not one dime of that settlement, regardless of how it came about to be.

Quoting: Nobody in Particular

He used most of the money to take care of her and again....the official hospital papers did not report neck trauma.

Quoting: Anonymous Coward 13539228

initial papers did report neck trauma. The whole thing was fucked up from day one. And she knows how she got that way. the Potassium depletion was a made up cover story for a murder with the added story that she dieted too extremely, so why don't you ones try to figure out the why of that one if you are going to discuss this. WHY WAS THERE A COVERUP. Believe me, besides the neck injury, supported or not, that she had a period of suffocation would have been obvious to competent medical people. I suspect she was left too long and there was some sort of medical incompetency, thus the insurance settlement, but I never fully understood what was claimed to happen. Insurance companies would rather pay up settlements, its cheaper sometimes than a drawn out case. This whole thing smelled for the git go.

And the big media show also suggested years upon years of games. That she stuck thru it all, is what I find amazing. for 15 shit ass years that woman lived in a hell of other peoples making. And the lessons will come to some over that one.

Quoting: Nobody in Particular

Her medical chart contained a note that "she apparently has been trying to keep her weight down with dieting by herself, drinking liquids most of the time during the day and drinking about 10–15 glasses of iced tea." [7] Upon admission to the hospital, she was noted as suffering from hypokalemia: her serum potassium level was an abnormally low 2.0 mEq/L (the normal range for adults is 3.5–5.0 mEq/L). Her sodium and calcium levels were normal. [8] Electrolyte imbalance is often caused by drinking excessive fluids. A serious consequence of low potassium levels can be heart rhythm abnormalities, including sudden arrhythmia death syndrome. [9] Vomiting, a self-induced act for many bulimic patients, is another cause of low potassium levels. Terri's husband, Michael, later filed and won a malpractice suit against her obstetrician on the basis that he failed to diagnose bulimia as the cause of her infertility.

If you are going to tell the story at least get the facts straight.

Assuming you have connected to her and and it is actually her should it still even matter anymore? She has "passed" and this life was a learning and teaching ground but is no longer relevant other the the learning experiences.

In the end the courts decided correctly, her HUSBAND IS her closest living relative to make the call. Even if your right how do you put this on paper and bring into a court system? You can't.

There is Spiritual Law of Creation, about 99% of all things.
There is Physical Law of Creation about 1% of all things.

There is the legal system comprising a heartless and mindless balance trying to balance between the two (on a good day).

She should have known this would be a battle hence the experience gained from it.

Response to the man saying that starving her to death was cruel. Assisted suicide is much less cruel, and a fuck lot quicker. With the laws as they are now, you can legally starve someone to death, but giving them an injection of pain medications that would painlessly allow them to sleep to death gets you executed in some states.

Some fucking system.
Quoting: redheadturkey

On that I will agree. If they wanted to KILL Terri that is what should have been done, not the brutal starvation, which she went thru 3 times consciously.

A decision like that is a tough one, but living as a vegetable only soothes those that are not laying in the bed.

Terri is better off now.

After having to make the same sort of decision on my own sis who suffered an aneurysm, it is a really hard thing to do, but one has to put there own feelings aside and do what the comatose person would want, not what the family would want.

Quoting: Madame X

You definitely get it Madame X as well as a lot of people here on GLP (which I would figure). If I am a vegetable, I have let all my family know not to let me survive. It is hard to the patient and family/friends.

Watched my mom die from Alzheimers and we had orders to not give any food or anything to sustain life. She was gone mentally, and was unconscious for about 5 days after we expected her to go. It was so difficult on the family and I sort of said when nurse was gone that I'd hit the morphine button a few times to make it go faster, knowing that could do it. No-one minded, even my dad, sister and brother and I think they agreed. I didn't do it, but the hospice knew we were so worn out, they bumped it a few extra times and did the trick. We all still cried but were still thankful there was no more suffering for all.

No she is dead by murder by suffocation from her husband, not the desire to please him unto doing her own body in. He had a girlfriend, she knew and so he attempted to suffocate her. That is the truth. I promised to get out that truth for her. I do so when opportunity arises like this thread today.

My argument is about that promise, which has nothing to do with other womens and mens games, , for she did not have massive tissue death from potassium deficiency nor a heart attack or whatever that bull shit story was in the first place and people who knew here, knew that too. I have been a woman long enough on this planet to know something about women on this world and I know they do cheap shit to keep men, but this is not the case with Terri.

its late, I need a shower, I am getting off. Hopefully some of you who will read this whole thread will have some material to ponder about, for she was never gone after that. She lived in that hell hole for 15 years in hopes of accomplishing at least in part, that her husband get his coming for the attempted murder. And a lot of other complicity alone the way to make money, and create a story to assist the NWO plans on what constitutes life. Good night.

White culture says that only poor ignorant females are fat. White men are only attracted to asian or boy-type figures. White women are starving themselves to attract certain types of wealthy men.

She had literally half a brain you fucking dolt red thumb I got, and you know that HOW? where the autopsy records released, including skull pics? If not, you have no way to know even those were a lie or not.

And she obviously had well more than "1/2" at the time of the murder attempt. And had she be given proper treatment, she wouldn't have lost more. If she had lost 1/2 within days of her injury, that would have been KNOWN. I am a nurse and I did a lot of rehab work. I have seen shit like this. SHE CHOSE to stay with her body and live, and it was denied to her at the time it would have been possible. Just because it was put out she had 1/2 a brain at the time of her last murder, and death by starvation is a terrible murder, does not mean she had 1/2 a brain soon after the accident. And 1/2 a brain or not, even if she had rehabilitation in the later years, she may have recovered amazingly well. There are people that HAVE. And if she had been released to family care.... That husband should have had his rights to her care severed by the very place reporting of the place she was kept in even. That they put up with what he did is abominable. There were many wrongs in this case.

Some day LIFE will be valued on this sad world, I hope anyway.

Well I don't remember if I cried,
When the doctors finally did abide,
but something touched me deep inside the day...
Terry Shiavodied...

We started singing ...

Bye Bye rights to live or to die
The libs got heavy, tried to mandate goodbye

And the right to life supporters had to waive their good try Saying
this will be the day that she died...
This will be the day that she died...

I met a girl who fed through tubes and I asked her for some happy news

But they pulled her plug and she went away...

And I went to planned parenthood
Where the liberals in my neighborhood said abortion... as a birth control is OK

And as I pondered life's decisions by deprivation or incisions

The choice became a clear one it wasn't even a near one

For the people who supported life the end was full of grief and strife
But judgement comes not in this life...
The day, Terry Shiavo died

Bye bye rights to live or to die
the libs got heavy, tried to mandate goodbye
And the right to life supporters had to waive their good try saying this will be the day that died

These types of decisions are never easy, especially for the family to make if and when a person cannot do so for him or herself. My brother that passed away back in January - he had cerebral palsy, and could not talk, eat, etc. My parents were his guardians and had to make such decisions. they met with a lawyer pretty early on in his life (he was only supposed to live to age 5 according to the doctors; he was 26 when he passed.) They decided to not have him necessitated if he ever stopped breathing, nor did they want him on a ventilator. He did have a feeding tube all his life, but that was the only way he could eat. When we was very young (until about age 5 or 6) my mom did feed him by mouth, but the process took a very long time. The food had to be blended up, mixed with some type of gravy, and it would take 3-4 tries for each individual bites for him to swallow it. It got to the point that he wasn't getting enough to grow as he should.

I dread the day I have to be in this position, either for my parents, or my husband. Actually, my hubby and I are planning to meet with a lawyer ourselves soon. We have 3 kids, ages 8, 5 and 1, and we need to take care of some stuff. We have life insurance, but we both need to do an advance directive, that way we know what each other wants, and we need to do some type of will for the kids - if we both passed, who would take them until they're adults (that's the biggie), and stuff like that. Honestly, I've put this off because I HATE thinking about it, but it needs to be done. If we don't, and something did happen to us both, then what? I can't do that do them.

Despite some here having a personal relationship with the comatose Terri and professing to knowing all there is to know in the universe, the autopsy of Terri Schiavo found no evidence that the severely brain-damaged woman was strangled or abused and that no amount of therapy would have reversed her condition.

Can you point to one link that says her condition had to do with her attempt to lose weight. Don't bother, you won't find anything of the sort. The bottom line is no one knows exactly what caused her heart attack.

Being a sufferer of Sleep Paralysis, I can't imagine a torment greater than being trapped in your body without being able to move. 2 minutes of total paralysis is absolutely terrifying, a lifetime of it would be unimaginable. I hope she was braindead, because if there was even a shred of consciousness in there, I guarantee you she prayed for death every single day.

Terri Schiavo entered a vegetative state in 1990 for undetermined reasons, possibly related to her long-term, untreated bulimia.

It was well documented at the time of her death.

The thought of that makes me shudder. From the looks of her brain on the CAT scan, and according to medical experts, she had no awareness. What amazes me is that some people thought that she did. Yet, they wanted to doom her to that living nightmare you describe.

I did try to write her parents but never heard back from them, so the letter went undelivered. I am skilled at what I do and I know I was in contact with her. Esu was initially part of it too and at that first part, I wasn't taking notes, so that is not written down. My notes were just notes too, made as we talked and not totally inclusive thus of the whole conversations.

Terris husband tried to murder her, that is why she was in that condition in the first place.

And I think the court process knew he was guilty. I don't remember the law right now there, but it was properly argued at one point that the parent's rights were primary in the situation for some reason though in the whole mess on TV. There were a lot of people who felt he was the one that harmed her and should have been listened to in that strange case,, regardless of rights or laws. the man abandoned her in the first place, the way he got paid off and what he paid for was reason for scepticism. I don't remember all the drama now.

Her HUSBAND made the correct, albeit tough decision.

Quoting: Anonymous Coward 1345212

her husband had no legal right to do that. And she never agreed to it before hand. the courts should have placed her in the care of the parents who did wish to provide for her. Please go to my website and read what terri herself had to say. Terri was injured by her husband in the first place. I imagine doctors knew this was a attempted suffocation in fact and he should have gone to jail for it.

I wouldn't want to live like that. I wouldn't want to die like that. They withheld food and water from her till she died. If you did that to your old ill dog you would go to jail for cruelty, and rightly so. It is cruel. She wasn't allowed to die she was murdered. Some say she had no awareness and didn't suffer. There's only one person that knows that for sure, the victim, Terri Schiavo.

Keeping people alive that can't move or speak costs money. She was brain dead, but I do understand her parents wish to keep her, but who pays? Many of you that want every baby to be born regardless of mutation have to get your fucking wallet out and pay. It's just that simple... I think that in this particular case, the husband should have been shot, but understand if you want everyone to live, we will all be paying for it, so bitching about high prices or health insurance and taxes doesn't fit your love of life. Living in this case will break the fucking bank. More mongoloid births without abortion rights just make you pay more. Santorum for example wants her to live, but is against paying for it, that's why he can never win. '

If I had a daughter/sister/mother/wife that died in such a way...I would ask myself why she felt the need to put her health in such jeopardy. Why did she feel the need to be so thin as to injure her health and put herself into a coma?

Why does no one want to ask that?????!!!! Why do white men want their women to put their health at risk to meet some "ideal"? why does no one on this forum want to ask the hard questions instead of worrying about some poor chick that put herself into a coma.

That's what I thought when this first got big in the news but NO, she was most definitely NOT brain dead or in a vegetative coma state. She was paralyzed but alert, able to track you with her eyes and express emotion.

The press didn't show you that but there were videos of her in her bed and it was clear she responded affirmatively when her family came in the room. She was aware of what was happening around her but not able to express herself.

I recall Republican pundits saying that on talk shows, but I don't recall any of her doctors ever stating that she showed any signs of responsiveness. They did extensive EEG scans that showed no brain activity. By the end most of her brain was liquified. That's something you can't come back from. Hard to believe it has been seven years--

I could understand both sides of the story, but really, to starve someone and dehydrate them is cruel beyond belief.

If you have ever been sick and dehydrated and needed an IV of fluid--you know how horrible it is to let this happen to anyone.

I feel the same way about Hospice--

What they do to people on Death row is kinder.

Too bad this story didn't have a happy ending--seems like it just got a lot of people really upset--but it is good to consider the circumstances and prepare accordingly for your own life's end.

just a sad situation? Where was America during that time? People could have risen up and prevented this all and they all sat on their butts, did nothing, and said "just a sad situation". This country is rotten to the core.

You are saved by your own desire to have eternal life and grow in the ways of God and not any other way. God gives you a lot of time to acquire wisdom before you make your final decision and fuse/merge with the Father Fragment within your mind/soul. Jesus taught the reincarnation of the soul to grow in wisdom and grace. It was left out of your bible on purpose. Where is your WISDOM? Your GRACE? Your respect for LIFE? Not much present yet anyway on this world. Where is your love of LIFE? Missing, if its OK to have the genocide going on in the Middle East.

Being written in the Book of LIFE means making the final decision to Serve the Will of the Father and Become LIKE him. The process of Fusion/merger with the Father Fragment makes you an actual Son of the Father, where by before then, over the ages of wisdom attainment you were a FAITH SON. The harvest of REAL SONS from this world is rather small, and most will be moving on to try again elsewhere. You are not ready to graduate to the higher ways. This graduation is EARNED.

How about some common sense....an inordinate amount of resource is spent on the very sick without much time or hope and the preemie babies who will have a hellish existence....people deserve access to reasonable health care....ah but what is reasonableas big gov gets more involved you hate to concede to a british medical brutality model of rationing.....religious zealots will spend any amount to keep someone alive as long as its not their money.....terry schiavo was just a political football to be kicked around.

any common sense suggestions.....I know if every pays their own way people will make the correct choice.....but healthcare is too big of a taxable industry to leave it so many hands.....what flavor do you prefer Obamacare or Romneycare.. they both taste the same just different colors.....

OH yes they were, but their direct lack of action. A whole society allowed it. I bring great honor to a lady I got to meet via telepathy. What a brave soul to have given 15 years so a country, or at least the people involved with her might grow up. Did they? After the fact some times. Where was this organization that ran that nursing home she was committed too? where was the support there for HER LIFE, when it was plainly obvious she was still with her body? Why did they allow all those years of torture to this woman? Why did some employees there who saw the wrong not work in some way to right it? Were these nursing personnel Christians? Did they go to their churches and meet with them and raise a little HOLY HELL? That these 15 years happened is a great disgrace and blot on those responsible at all levels and after the story was carried public it became the responsibility of a whole country. A MIGHTY TEST. Each of you who were aware of this story, ask yourselves, did YOU learn anything? Did YOU take a stand with your own circles about what was right or wrong about it?

A husband got away with murder, but it took 15 years for him to do it, and then final murder success was atrocious beyond all reasoning in how it was carried out. Over the years the man gave her insulin to kill her, but somebody always came to the rescue, giving her juice, or maybe she just got her body by her presence of mind thru it. What was in it for this nursing home to allow such a long tragedy. Why did they allow this man to continue in his ways. So many questions, so few answers.

When is American going to grow a righteous soul?

Re: Seven Years Ago Today, Terri Schiavo Lived Her Last Day

Actually, tellingitstraight, in a way they are, because the religious right are responsible for a great number of our medical ethics laws in this country, and they believe in the sanctity of life so much so that in order to mercifully let someone die that would be in Terri's position the only choice you have is to withdraw the support of the tube.

If they allowed assisted suicide/euthanasia in the terminally ill/people whose brains are damaged so badly as to have no quality of life, with the legal consent of the next of kin, of course, it would keep things like this from happening.

And as for you, NIP, I know who you are, and having so much worry for the so called "sanctity of life" when you think dissolution of the soul essence of anyone at all should be a choice anyone should be forced to make sickens me with the hypocrisy of it, honestly. If you believe all life should be sacred, the life of the soul should be even more so.

What was in it for this nursing home to allow such a long tragedy. Why did they allow this man to continue in his ways. So many questions, so few answers.

Actually, by the time I became aware of it, I did make my stand about what was right or wrong. I thought the poor woman should be allowed to pass peacefully, since it was becoming increasingly clear that her quality of life was abysmal, and even if she could have recovered before that point, it still likely would have been questionable.

To say the husband got away with murder is hearsay. Sure there's reports on sites that say what he said, but again, that is hearsay. What comes out of the mouths of humans can rarely be trusted, unfortunately. I still think it's a laugh riot that someone's claiming to have channeled her before and after she died. If you want to say something like that, there should be more to the story than suppositions on things that even the general public knows, not a whole lot of 'I think's and what not--that doesn't lend much credibility, if you ask me.

You can sit on your high horse all you want, but in the end when it was obvious that she wasn't going to recover, she should have been allowed to pass peacefully, to let go of her earthly vessel and move to a new life, since the one here was going to be nothing but pain and suffering if she stayed. If the husband was so guilty, if it was so widely known what he was trying to do, or if there was any suspicion about his actions or inactions, then someone should have acted sooner to get him banned from her bedside or tried to do more than just talk about it behind his back. If hospital staff have enough to go on, thinking that someone is interfering with the care of a patient, they can and DO have the ability and right to keep people out of the room, or only be in under supervision.

I think by now, seven years later, it all should be left alone. There's no use in stirring up old hurts and grudges from the past when nothing can be done about them.
